

Emme Release “Collapse” Video

Austin duo Emme (“Em”) release the video for “Collapse,” a meditation on love and black holes, via The Austin Chronicle.

“Tranquil, while imbuing a strong sense of intention” – Austin Chronicle

“Somanath’s vocals are entirely captivating, lush and caressing” - Obscure Sound

“Nichols crafts together arrangements that reveal intricate textures that interlock in perfect harmony” - Earbuddy

Formed in 2016 after years of friendship, late night music nerd-out sessions, and pounds upon pounds of pizza, Emme is the indie-electro project of Sowmya Somanath and Walter Nichols. Having come up in both eastern and western classical music traditions, Somanath and Nichols let these distinct backgrounds inform their writing choices, resulting in a unique take on a pop duo.

Experiencing Emme live can feel like standing inside a gemstone. Reflections flutter, refractions bounce, and transformations weave about in the form of Somanath’s lush vocals and Nichols’s eclectic mix of saxophone, synthesizers, and effects. The resulting songs question pop conventions; they both challenge and reward.

Additionally the band has been releasing cover videos shot on camcorder including Depeche Mode’s “Enjoy the Silence,” Whitney’s “No Woman” and Porches’s “Goodbye,” reworking them into hypnotic and atmospheric renditions of their originals.

Collapse Video - <https://bit.ly/2wI9DKh>

Cover Series - <https://bit.ly/2IzmlQM>

Austin Chronicle Premiere - <https://bit.ly/2RoonXV>

Download Hi-Res Images Here - <https://www.emmetheband.com/press-kit>